Dr. McCurdy's clinical research focus is on the diagnosis and treatment of septic shock, including optimal resuscitation strategies and use of angiotensin II as a vasopressor. Dr. McCurdy is also interested in applications of telemedicine to the ICU, critical care delivery in resource-limited settings, and the analysis of the microcirculation in inflammatory states and shock.

Highlighted Publications:

Links:
Dr. Shah’s research interests are in clinical studies of therapeutic hypothermia on lung injury and systemic inflammation and developing and evaluating medical education, including curriculum design and incorporation of new teaching methods such as flipped classroom, small group learning, and simulation into fellowship training.

Highlighted Publications:

Links: